STATE POLICE GET MAN ALLEGED TO HAVE ROBBED HOME

Willie Smith, Trenton, Sent To County Jail; Under $1,000 Bail

MORRISVILLE N E W S

To Make Appeal for Funds for Community Nursing Service

MORRISVILLE, Mar. 23—Charged with breaking, entering and robbing the home of Mrs. W. Ogden Britton, of Overton avenue, Willie Smith, who gave his address as Trenton, was committed in default of $1,000 bail, to the county jail at Doylestown by Justice of the Peace Neal Nolan. Trooper Peter Riley, of the Pennsylvania State Police, prosecuted the case.

According to the police Smith broke a glass in a rear door to enter the house where he stole jewelry valued at $150. Trooper Riley located some of the jewelry in a Trenton pawn shop and this led to Smith's arrest. He admitted the theft, according to the officer.

Morrisville Red Cross is getting ready for the annual appeal for funds with which to carry on the community nursing service for the coming year. The budget, which has just been made up, shows that $900 is needed and a house to house canvass will be made in an effort to raise this money. Mrs. J. Gordon White is chairman of the committee in charge of the drive.

In the estimated expenditures $1500 is set aside for the salary of the nurse; $60 for vacation supply; $376 for compensation insurance; $120 contribution house in lieu of rent; $27 for printing and stationery; $3 for telephone and telegraph; $244 for upkeep of automobile including gas, oil and insurance; $15 for supplies; $100 for home service.

The estimated receipts are $300 from nurse's fees from individuals and insurance companies; $175 from card parties; $474.40 from Red Cross Roll Call; amount to be raised through the appeal, $893.26. Because of the failure to raise the needed amount in the appeal last April it was necessary to hold an emergency drive last November when the American Legion put on the drive and collected enough money to carry on the work until time for the drive next month. An effort will be made to raise the full amount needed for the year so that no further appeals will be necessary for a year.

For the purpose of raising funds with which to purchase books for the Community House library, Mrs. C. C. Callin of Union street, is conducting a series of card parties at her home. The next party will be held next Thursday night.

More than 150 local people will take part in the community show, "Julia's Aunt," which will be given in the Community Theatre here Thursday and Friday nights, April 4 and 5. The comedy, which will be in three acts, will be given under the auspices of the Berean Bible class of the Methodist Church.

The cast is now being selected and some of the best talent in Morrisville will take part. Some of those already selected are: James J. Cahill, Harry M. Lajr, Mrs. Albert White, Mrs. Alvin R. Pratt, Stacy Tetterme, J. Allen Hopper, Charles H. Heller and Neal Nolan. Other members will be announced later. Some of the best vocal talent is to be selected for the production.

Prior to the raising of the curtain for the first act a "Kiddies Kabaret" will be given by talented children of the borough. There will also be a

Vanishing of President Is Theme of Motion Picture

At the Grand today is one of the most startling pictures ever presented, "The President Vanishes," with Edward Arnold, Paul Kelly, and a cast that is composed of stars in their own right. The president disappears without trace. The government is disorganized, martial law is declared on the entire Eastern Seaboard to combat rising tide of radicals. This is the startling story that is almost unbelievable yet shows you the inner workings today, and what might happen. It is one of the most interesting pictures that has yet been presented.

There will be the usual short subject programme and news events; also "Night Raiders," which is chapter 13 of Buck Jones' super-serial, "Red Rider."

Members of the association were well impressed with the beautiful slides Mr. McCowan used in illustrating his lecture.

Before adjournment members of the association were informed of the pruning demonstration County Agent Chas. K. Hollowell, Phila., will conduct on the property of J. V. Hare, here, on Tuesday afternoon, March 26 at 3:30 o'clock. A wide variety of shrubs in that locality will be used in this demonstration.

With his face, ears and neck badly torn by dogs, and his arms painfully contused, Vincent Ferrara, 7, of Fillmore street, was given anti-toxin treatment at the Harriman Hospital yesterday, and 35 stitches taken in the deep gashes and tears about his face and ears.

The left ear was nearly torn off by the dogs, and the lad, who is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Dominick A. Ferrara, was considered in a serious condition for a time. He is reported as slightly improved at Harriman Hospital this morning, however.

The boy entered the yard of the property of William E. DeGroot which adjoins the Jefferson avenue school, and two dogs are said to have pounced upon him, biting him on the face and arms. Both ears, the nose, upper lip, and both arms were painfully bitten.

Great Britain May Withdraw

By William Parker
I. N. S. Staff Correspondent

Paris, France, Mar. 23—Fearing peace is being imperiled by the stern attitude of France in the arms crisis, Great Britain today threatened to withdraw from future negotiations unless the French government takes immediate steps to "lessen the tension and keep the Little Entente in hand."

Pending a meeting with Foreign Minister Pierre Laval and Fulvio Slicchi, Italian under-secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, Captain A. Eden, British Lord Privy Seal, told Laval bluntly France must adopt a more pacific attitude.

"If she fails to do so," he said Britain may decline to take part in a proposed second three-power parley between France, Britain and Italy at Lake Como, Italy, next month.

Captain Eden made it clear Britain is being guided in the present crisis by a determination to preserve peace at all costs. He pointed out to Laval, Britain considers the Little Entente bloc a "danger spot" in an already strained Europe.

He added that Britain was not going to be stampeded into an anti-German alignment by threats of a Franco-Soviet alliance.

European Situation

Premier Mussolini of Italy marshalled a thousand bayonets beneath the Fascist banner today as the wheels of diplomatic machinery began to turn in an effort to dissipate the European arms crisis.

Developments in leading capitals: Rome—Mussolini summoned the entire class of 1911 to the colors as a precautionary measure, thus placing 660,000 regular troops under arms. With Italy's 400,000 Fascist militiamen, the order gave 11 Duce more than a million men ready for any eventuality.

Paris—Tri-partite conversations between Britain, France and Italy began with Britain warning France to lessen the tension in Europe or risk withdrawal of British mediation.

Berlin—Plans completed for naval discussions during the Hitler-Simon conference tomorrow with a new European naval conference considered to air the Reich demands for a fleet sufficient to combat the menace of Soviet invasion by sea.

EDUCATION MUST BE PART OF PUPIL, HE SAYS

Charles Boehm, Morrisville, Addresses Boy Scout Leaders Here

INSTRUCTIVE MEETING

"No education is successful unless it becomes a part of the pupil," said Assistant County Superintendent Charles Boehm last evening, while addressing the Training Forum of the Bucks County Boy Scout leaders during their March meeting at Bristol Presbyterian Church. The Scout leaders of the lower end of the county, south of Doylestown, had gathered to discuss problems, relative to troop organization.

"Character training is a development by practice. Scouting aids in the development of good character traits. Learning is specific. We must follow the stage of: first, knowledge; second, desire; third, practice, and fourth, habit. It has often been said that 'nothing succeeds as success.' Scouting is a program of gradual advancement and appropriate recognition of achievement," continued Superintendent Boehm.

"Scouting has done much for the development of proper use of leisure time. Bucks County has one sixth of the various kinds of minerals that are on the earth, over one hundred various mosses, and countless kinds of plants and trees. The outstanding landscape artists of our country live near New Hope. It is one of the first three counties in the state with the highest percentage of road, in relation with its population. Unfortunately, many people only see the colors, and fail to appreciate the more fascinating experience of knowing what makes the colors. I was a Scout when I was younger, and I believe I would be like many of the people today, if it had not been for my Scout experience. It taught me to appreciate the outdoors. It develops the ability of people to enjoy a very inexpensive, healthy, leisure activity—hiking."

Superintendent Boehm conducted a brief discussion period following his remarks, and received a warm wave of applause for his participating in the Leader's forum.

HOLD DRIVER OF CAR FOR KILLING YOUTH

Inquest Held Into the Death of Charles H. Pope, of Tullytown

"DROVE RECKLESSLY"

A coroner's jury holding an inquest here yesterday afternoon into the death of Charles H. Pope, 9, Fallsington avenue, Tullytown, placed responsibility for the accident upon George A. Sunday, 31, 168 Edmond street, Hamilton Township, N. J.

At the instruction of the jury, Sunday was held in the sum of $2,500 bail for the May term of Bucks county criminal court, there to answer to the charge of involuntary manslaughter. The jury ruled that Pope came to his death from injuries sustained by being struck by a car operated in a reckless manner by Sunday.

Coroner John J. Sweeney conducted the inquest, and the jury comprised Charles A. Rathke, John Black, Dr. William Groff, William Ewing, William Lynn and Harry VanHorn.

Corporal Evans, highway patrol, told the jury of receiving a call concerning the accident from the Rev. Williams at Tullytown on the night of March 15th. Evans went to the scene and obtained a description of the car and learned from the Harriman Hospital that Pope was dead. The Corporal testified that in the meantime Wilmer Anderson at Tullytown called the patrol station for a New Jersey license number of an automobile which had run into the rear of a parked truck here in Bristol. This number was checked through the New Jersey State Police, and found to belong to Sunday. Anderson had obtained the license number of the car from the driver of the truck, and followed the machine up the Bristol Pike as far as Tullytown, where Anderson turned off and soon after arriving home called the highway patrol to learn the name of the owner. Corporal Evans went to Hamilton Township and with the assistance of the officers of that district Sunday was apprehended and placed under arrest. John Makohutz, 347 Grand street, and Thomas Kuronya, 1044 Genesee street, Trenton, N. J., who rode with Sunday from Philadelphia to Trenton, were interviewed. The men admitted that they had been drinking and Kuronya said that he heard a thud against the car as they passed through Tullytown, and that he had seen children in the street. He said Sunday was driving.

Photographs of Sunday's car were taken, and the machine was found damaged on the right front side as well as back of the windshield. There were visible marks of clothing made on the dust of the car, such as would be made by corduroy clothing. Splashes of red were found on the front of the machine and Corporal Evans had a chemist to remove and analyze these, and they were found to be human blood. Pieces of glass were picked up from the scene of the accident in Tullytown, and were found to match with jagged pieces remaining in Sunday's car.

Christen Sea Scout Ship Wasp at Andalusia

ANDALUSIA, Mar. 23—The Sea Scout Ship "Wasp" was christened on Wednesday evening by Mrs. D. Chapman at the ceremony symbolizing the formal investiture of the Andalusia Sea Scouts into the Boy Scouts of America organization.

The ceremony held at Lennig Cabin was conducted by Sea Scout Chairman Stiles, of the S. S. S. Rainbow Clipper, of Croydon Manor, with the able assistance of Skipper R. Brenner, of S. S. S. Rainbow Clipper, who impersonated "Father Neptune."

The audience, composed of many parents of the Sea Scouts, members of the Men's Committee and Mothers Auxiliary, B. S. A. of Andalusia, were held spellbound by the beautiful services, and enjoyed the antics of "Father Neptune." The conduct of the members of the S. S. S. Wasp was quite worthy of praise inasmuch as they carried themselves as veterans instead of neophytes.

A social time was enjoyed by all after the ceremony, at which time William Lange, Sr., played the piano as a feature, and the members of the Mothers' Auxiliary, B. S. A. of Andalusia, served refreshments in the form of coffee and cake.

RUBBER FROM GOLDENROD

Whether they fever addicts will agree or not, goldenrod seems to be a valuable plant. John V. Miller, secretary and treasurer of the Edison Botanical Research Corporation at West Orange, N. J., says that experiments have now been carried far enough to warrant the assertion that if the nation's requirements of 100,000,000 pounds of rubber annually could no longer be supplied from abroad they could be supplied domestically from plants like the goldenrod.

Rubber from goldenrod was a dream of Mr. Edison. When the great scientist of Menlo Park died, he had advanced his experiments to a point where the amount of rubber that could be extracted from goldenrod was about 6 per cent. Since his death the experiments have been continued until now the yield, Mr. Miller says, is 13 per cent. From an acre of goldenrod this means a yield of about 700 pounds of rubber.

Perhaps the solution for the government's problem of how to utilize sub-marginal lands, as well as the problem of how to increase the earnings of farmers, may yet lie in growing goldenrod for rubber. It should be explained, however, that the specie or type of goldenrod used in the Edison experiments, the solidago leavenworthii, is said by Mr. Miller to have been grown successfully thus far only as far north as Tennessee. Moreover, though it appears that the physical task of supplying our own rubber needs could be done at home, it is to be noted that the commercial task is still something else.

The present market price of rubber is about thirteen cents a pound. According to Mr. Miller's estimate, rubber from goldenrod, on the basis of present experiments, would cost about five times as much, or about 70 cents a pound.

TOWNSEND CLUB DISCORD

New England's traditional spirit of independence again manifests itself in the revolt of the New England Federation of Townsend Clubs against the parent organization in California. The dissatisfaction, however, is not with Dr. Townsend or with the famous spend-as-you-get old age pension plan.

The seceding New Englanders bestow on Dr. Townsend the faint praise that he is a "nice old doctor without any knowledge of business management, but who can not be blind to the fact that the national organization has become a racket."

To this Charles M. Hawks, of the California group, replies that J. Wilfred Corr, leader of the New England division, is "working a racket of his own."

From which it may be guessed that whatever may be the fate of the Townsend plan, some of its promoters may not have been content to wait till old age overtakes them before participating in the benefits accruing from a nationwide organization to get the famous scheme enacted into law.

The latest thought on the future of the Blue Eagle is that Congress may keep it as a pet.

8c Zone Stamp

For the benefit and instruction of stamp collecting enthusiasts of Bristol and vicinity, the recently formed Bristol Stamp Club is planning a series of articles on the ten Park Issues. It is planned to have one article a week published.

This stamp appeared one place ahead of its turn, being seventh of the series, to be issued, and was placed on sale September 18th, 1934, at Zion National Park, Utah, and Washington, D. C.

It is vertical in arrangement, and gray-green in color and portrays the Great White Throne, a large uplifted rock, almost 2500 feet high, in Zion National Park.

The original photograph was made by G. A. Grant for the National Park Service; the design was made from this photograph for the stamp by Victor S. McCloskey, Jr., and the engraving was done by D. R. McLeod and Carl T. Arlt.

This design is considered by most a masterpiece, by far the finest of them all. There is power, majesty, a sovereign beauty in it that brings a catch in the throat and a quickening heart-beat. Even the name of that masterpiece of nature: The Great White Throne, enhances the effect.

It is a perfect picture and superb engraving. Even though the color is a sacrifice, it can be forgotten in the grandeur of the scene itself.

An order of 15,000,000 of these stamps was given, and the final figures show that 15,860,000 were printed. These were from plates numbering 21324, 21325, 21326 and 21327.

At Zion National Park on the first day of issue, 75,280 stamps were sold while at Washington, D. C., 63,693 stamps were sold.

The Bristol Stamp Club will hold its meeting on Tuesday evening, next, at 8 o'clock in the Bristol Presbyterian Church.

A most interesting meeting is being planned and there will be an exhibit, sale and exchange of stamps.

All members are urged to attend.

CHAPTER XXVII

Alspaugh's stock, along with the rest of the market, continued to fall. A few more days of anguished watching of the ticker, and his new margin was wiped out. Again his broker called for more money, or, as an alternative, for authority to prevent further losses, by immediate sale of the declining securities.

The only star in Homer's darkness now was his faith in his chief, and even this was fitfully obscured by clouds of doubt. Had Jasper Ingram taken on too big a load even for a superman to carry? Alspaugh had his doubts. At times he asked himself frantically what he was going to do to avert ruin. Then growing bold, he told himself that he might as well be hung for a sheep as for a lamb and did the only thing open to him. He used more of Ingram's money to cover his margins.

Everybody about the office noticed Alspaugh's nervousness. Dark rumors were based on it, for he was deeper in the chief's confidence than anyone, and it was surmised that his condition must be due to some secret crisis in the company's affairs.

On the day Ingram went to Washington, ostensibly for an appeal to the R. F. C., Homer was so nervous he could only make a pretense of attending to his work. Everything depended on the outcome of this application. It was maddening to be kept in suspense about the success of the opening negotiations, and about the final outcome. Yet he knew that he would have been useless to the chief if he had been taken along, for his hands were so unsteady he could not make a legible note.

All day, as he sat hunched at his desk drawing weird figures on the blotter, he pictured Jasper Ingram returning with news that the loan had been summarily refused, saw him revising his plans, drawing in, striking off his list the one company that mattered to Alspaugh, and heard him casually take up the question of that private account.

He was in a pitiable state when he arrived home that night, and Marian looked at him with cold distaste.

"You've got the worst case of jitters I ever saw," she said. "What on earth's the matter with you? I hope to goodness you're not getting flu or anything."

Homer was not touched by this so-called. "I'm all right," he snapped. "If I have the jitters, it's because the whole damned country has 'em."

When Jasper H. Ingram has to apply to the R. F. C. for money, that's the beginning of the end—'You mark my words'."

"I'm glad you aren't sick, anyway," Marian said, "because I made a date for us to play contract at the Club."

Homer cackled suddenly. "And the way I'm feeling tonight! What do you suppose that'll set back? Is this a time to throw money away? I couldn't keep who bid what in my head tonight. My own idea's to get tight—costs less, anyhow."

"All right," she said indifferently. "You get tight and we'll pick up another fourth."

"You're a hell of a wife!" He stared at her with bloodshot, accusing eyes. "Don't care what I do, do you? Don't care how I feel—Why can't you act human, when you see me like this?"

"Really, Homer, if you haven't more tact than to bring your business worries home to upset me when you know that since my accident I've been a nerve."

"You! You! You!" he shouted. "What about me for a change?"

He pulled her to her feet and pointed to her reflection in the mirror over the mantel. "You look like a nervous wreck, don't you?"

It was true that the excitement of Marian's latest love had refreshed her, set her blooming richly, quickened her vitality and her physical appeal. His tormented face beside hers was incongruous, pitiable.

"You look so healthy and so pretty and so damn kissable—I'm not going to stand for your guff about being sick any more!"

ness. She uttered a sharp, choked cry and sagged in his arms, taxing Homer's strength to support her.

"Now what?" he cried, more in disgust than alarm. "Marian, you behave!" He didn't believe in her fainting, and when his commands and pleadings failed to bring her out of it, he gripped her shoulders and shook her.

Marian forced herself to remain limp and uncertainty topped his head. Maybe after all . . . ? The doctor had dropped a word or two about shock after her accident. Homer lowered his wife to the chertlefield and looked at her doubtfully. She let one white arm drop to the floor, taking a smart rap on the knuckles and not wincing.

After a minute or two she thought she might open her eyes and did so just in time to save herself from a dash of cold water, for Homer was hastening towards her with a brimming glass. She took it from him and drank, with a smile of gratitude. "You see!" she said pathetically.

"Oh, yes, I see," His response was sour, for he was still not sure that she wasn't fooling him. "You're all right as long as I let you alone, is that it?"

"Yes, dear, I think so. I feel much better now. I even think I might go on over to the Club, after I've rested a little. You'll come, won't you, even if you won't play bridge?"

"No, I won't!" he exploded. "I'll drive you over, but somebody else will have to bring you home. I'll go right back into town and see a show or something. I've got to get my mind off the market and J. E. and his damned loan."

"Go ahead and have a good time!" she urged generously. Half hour later, at the Club, Marian went to a booth and called a New York number.

"He's coming into town on the 8:02," she said. "Will you see that one of your men follows him?"

Homer walked out of the Pennsylvania station a prey to such a tangled complex of emotions that the shadowing skill of the man who trailed him was quite wasted. He would hardly have noticed it if a platoon of policemen had fallen into step behind him.

He wanted to forget, for just a few hours; and in planning the night before he he was already beginning to forget. He gave the taxi driver the address of the speakery to which he had taken Cathleen, and then he had several drinks. Each of them flung the suspense about Ingram, the spender of the day, reckoning, further away from the warm exciting present and the immediate future.

He took a little book out of his breast pocket and turned to a list of telephone numbers, with initials appended, at the back.

He drew blanks on the first three numbers he called. But the next girl—Dot Whiting—was in. It was so long since he had called her that he had to identify himself pretty thoroughly before she remembered him. Then she became agreeable.

"Oh, boy! Am I glad to hear your voice!" she cried. "Of course you can come over, but how about something to eat first? Where shall I meet you?"

Whenever Laura Ingram closed her eyes she saw the Infanta's robes glowing in the darkness. The possibility of owning those royal and historic jewels had taken possession of her. She must have them. She considered the contents of the wall safe in which she kept her own ornaments, a collection large enough and valuable enough to have stocked a small exclusive jeweler's shop. Perhaps the firm from which most of these things had been purchased would buy some of them back, since she was among its best customers. But when she had looked over the diamond necklaces and the ropes of pearls, the earrings and the scores of rings, her bracelets and brooches of emeralds, diamonds and sapphires, she found there was nothing she could bear to part with.

Her career as the wife of an immensely wealthy man had given her a surprising number of false ideas about money, about her own claims, about the relative values of things. She was still, at forty-eight, a handsome woman. Presidents of national banks, officials of the treasury, and prominent financiers whom she often entertained, deferred to her and sedately flattered her. At her own table, they flattered her by appearing to take her views seriously. As a result, she felt she had a footing in the financial world. She knew, at least, that she had influential friends there.

She decided to consult one of these men—Patrick Higgins—as soon as her husband was safely off to Chicago.

The carefully-groomed, bald-headed bank president listened with respectful interest Mrs. Ingram's description of the Infanta's rubies, her passionate asseveration that she simply had to have them, and her admission that Jasper did not want to buy them for her.

"He thinks we might be criticized for spending so much on jewels at this time," she explained, and the same thought was in both their minds: Millicent might have a direct interest in this heirloom.

"Why, there's Seward's car!" Mrs. Ingram said, looking out of the window after she had locked the door in the wall-safe. "We'll go downstairs now, shall we. I've told them to serve tea under the big copper beech."

An army of gardeners' assistants raked the Grangefield lawns, so that a leaf had hardly detached itself from its parent twig before it was swept into a bag to be burned. Under the fiery splendors of the trees the lawns stretched their spotless green velvet, and Millicent again voiced her admiration of the grounds, as Laura poured tea and thought what a perfect daughter-in-law this girl would make. Seward joined them, a little late.

If he seemed rather abstracted, the other two did not notice it. Laura had conceived the idea of a house-party of young people, and was receiving more suggestions for names from Millicent than from her son. All this was interrupted by a servant with a small package on a tray. "For you, sir," said the maid to Seward.

He took it without great interest, but, "Do you mind if I open it?" he asked. A registered package was at least more intriguing than the conversation.

The shape of the package indicated nothing and the handwriting was unfamiliar. He lifted the lid and then hastily put it on again and tried to bundle box, paper and all, out of sight. But his mother had caught a blue flash and she leaned forward, attracted as always by the glimpse of jewels.

"What is it, dear? Why, who could be sending you anything like that—jewelry, surely?"

"A nothing," he muttered. "No! Do let me see!" She reached for the box, lifted out Cathleen's bracelet and let it dangle from her fingers. "How very pretty! And how indiscreet of me to make you show it. Of course you have bought this to give to some lucky girl! If my birthday weren't just behind me, I'd hope that I were the girl!"

Seward was not listening. So Miss Cathleen McCarthy had sent the damned thing back. Why had she done that? Not a word with it—the little cheap box hadn't held even tissue paper, just the slumped heap of platinum links and colored rubies. Seward was angry and puzzled and sulky, and deep inside him, a little glad, at having the trinket returned.

He would have accepted his mother's suggestion that it was to be her Christmas present if his associations with the bracelet had been less painful. He said to Millicent, "Do you want it? You may have it."

Millicent uttered a little squeal of delight and clutched at it. Laura stared at her son. "Well, of all the ungrateful ways of offering a tribute! Couldn't you at least say that it would make you very happy if Millicent would accept this pretty thing? I hope you will, my dear," she added to the girl. "Sapphires match your blue eyes!"

She was thinking, "They are engaged then, or on the verge of it, though he won't give me the satisfaction of letting me know it. He wouldn't, of course, venture to offer her anything so valuable as this, unless there were a pretty clear understanding between them!"

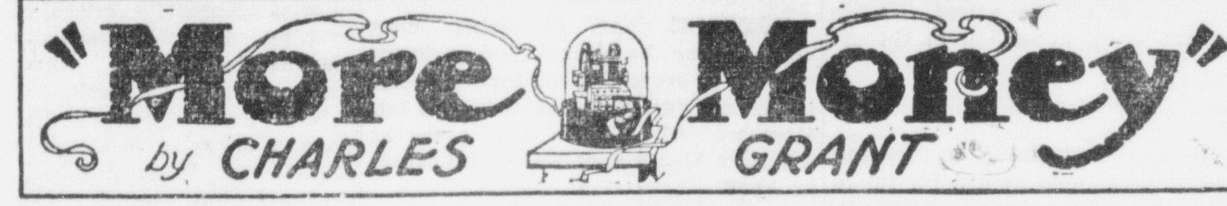

Millicent thought, "He does mean to propose. This is giving the way. He certainly has queer manners, but he'd hardly offer me this, right under his mother's nose, unless he was sure of her."

CHAPTER XXVIII

It was a shame she could not show them, and though she determined she would not let anyone see them, she felt her resistance weaken when Millicent Hinshaw came to tea. Millicent, after all, was like a daughter—or so would be, she hoped.

"Don't say anything about this, my dear," she said. "I couldn't resist the opportunity to buy them, because, of course, one might never have such another chance in a lifetime. But just at this moment, when there's so much talk about unemployment, and everything—And these will be heirlooms, something to hand down in the family forever—"

Her eyes met the girl's in the dressing-table mirror, as she sat before it admiring herself strung with rutilant flashings, and the same thought was in both their minds: Millicent might have a direct interest in this heirloom.

"Why, there's Seward's car!" Mrs. Ingram said, looking out of the window after she had locked the door in the wall-safe. "We'll go downstairs now, shall we. I've told them to serve tea under the big copper beech."

but he'd hardly offer me this, right under his mother's nose, unless he was really getting serious—"

And Seward thought, "Has she got blue eyes? I never noticed." He shot a glance at them, and found they were indeed, a sort of pale China blue.

The remembered beauty of Cathleen's eyes suddenly stabbed him. They were the color of Mediterranean seas, full of depth and light and what he had taken to be soul. Angriely he blinked the vision of them away.

Patrick McCarthy brooded over the dishonour he

By BURNLEY

That formidable aggregation of high-scoring threats, the Toronto Maple Leafs, are naturally tabbed as favorites to win the Stanley Cup play-offs that start later this month. And it is with good reason that betting men have established Connie Smythe's goal-getters as the team to beat.

On paper, the Leafs figure to run away with the championship. There is no doubt that they are the class of the entire National Hockey League. However, the Toronto sextet, handicapped to quite some extent by injuries during the last part of the present season, haven't been the invincible outfit they were at the start of the campaign.

One of the most costly mishaps suffered by the Leafs occurred in a most unusual fashion. Harvey "Busher" Jackson, who along with Chuck Conacher menaces the enemy goalies in formidable fashion, was laid up last month with a badly gashed leg, and oddly enough, the accident didn't occur in a hockey game.

The Busher was skating peacefully enough on a rink in front of his mother's house when he suddenly fell and hit the ice in such a manner that one of his feet doubled under him so that the point of his skate inflicted a nasty gash on his knee.

Jackson was only out for a short time due to this odd accident, but the injury has hampered him and has unquestionably spoiled his chances of winning the scoring crown from his team-mate, Conacher.

Busher is a deadly shot, and like most of the best hockey marksmen, swings the stick from the port side. Almost alone among hockey stars, Jackson has the unusual ability of taking two strides on the same skate without putting down the other foot, and this makes it impossible for the opposing goalie to tell which direction Busher will take on his next stride.

Goalies fear Jackson more than any man in the league because of this tricky habit of his.

was parked in Bristol previous to the accident, testified that while he was in an eating place here, the driver of a car with a New Jersey license crashed into the rear of his truck. Polinzi said he came out and the driver of the car backed his machine away and drove away from the scene at a rapid rate of speed. The truck was not damaged, and Polinzi did not pursue the man.

Elizabeth Lovett, 15, of Tullytown, in a choking voice, told of roller skating with Pope at the time of the accident. The girl said that at the time of the accident she was ahead of Pope on the right side of the highway going in the direction of Trenton, when she heard a noise and turned to look back, and saw him lying on the road. She said the machine which struck him did not stop.

John Doan, Tullytown, said he saw the car proceeding at a rapid rate of speed, but knew that it was a black Chevrolet sedan with wire wheels.

Deputy Coroner W. Furman Young told of viewing the body in the hospital and gave the cause of death as a fractured skull.

Sunday, the driver of the car, was placed on the witness stand, and told of driving from Philadelphia to Trenton, with the two men previously named, and Stanley Rogers, of Croydon. Sunday said they all had five glasses of beer in a tap-room in Tressdale, and that they then stopped at a state liquor store, and Rogers bought a bottle of liquor to take to his home. Upon reaching Rogers' home Sunday was invited in for a drink. "I took about a half a 'shot' of liquor," Sunday told of crashing into the rear end of a truck in Bristol, and said the collision knocked the door out of the Virena Bennett, Elizabeth Caffey, the glass in the door, and one cowl-net Fretz of Quakertown spoke on "Scouting Objectives." There were three parts to his remarks: First, trying in the adult leadership along with boy enthusiasm; second, observation and deduction, and third, happy, helpful participating citizenship. He urged that every boy be given a chance to experiment—letting the boy feel his way, knowing that he can depend on his leaders for guidance.

During his address, Mr. Fretz said: "Scouting is outing. Drop the 'Sc' and make it outing. The most important urge, when boys join Scouting, is to participate in the outdoor program. If you will push forward the out-door program, you will have enthused Scouts. We must give a boy a definite aim in life, through our leadership of him. We are helped in doing this through the Merit Badge program."

"We cannot ignore the importance of the gang. It frequently carries on into mature life. The members of my Troop Committee are an old gang from High School days. This has made them better troop committeemen. In Scouting, we must utilize the gang, and make it a patrol with adult leadership. We must be always conscious of the need for adult friendships, and example. Boys need the value of being given ideals."

Scout Executive William F. Livermore discussed committee responsibility.
